AMUSEMENTS.

The attraction to be seen at the Grand Opera House in this city, on next Tuesday evening, Sept. 16th, will be a play of great heart interest, overflowing with comedy, entitled, "Reaping the Harvest." The play is said to be a great character study, with laughter, sentiment and pathos. They carry special and elaborate scenery for each of the four acts, with all the mechanical effects and the piece is presented by a company of artists selected for their fitness in their various roles. It resembles no other play, it stands alone. It tells a story of pure, wholesome heart interest. Its originality makes it the peer of them all.

To those who saw the play last season it would seem almost incredulous to say, that it now outshines its former enviable self. But the fact remains however, that the production is greatly elaborated upon. The most realistic snow storm scene ever offered, the picturesque Christmas scene, the grand church scene, the magnificent Garden scene and the improved Kronk Tavern scene are this season's added scenic features, while the great "Reaping the Harvest Quartette" supplies the musical portion of a play, that is about as near perfection as money and brains can make it.

—o—
The Shaw & Erlanger production of Gen. Lew Wallace's "Ben Hur," will be the opening attraction of the new Grand Opera House, Cincinnati, opening its engagement Monday, Sept. 15th. Nothing like it has ever been seen in this country before. It marks a distinct epoch in the matter of staging plays. In the first place, because so many apparently insurmountable obstacles have been overcome in a most artistic manner, and because of the generous outlay of money, making it necessary for producers who have any ambition to follow in the footsteps of Shaw & Erlanger, to go down deep into their wallets and spend thousands, if they wish to reach results at all approaching those achieved by the marvelous presentation of "Ben Hur." Undoubtedly no one of the thousands who have read this most fascinating novel will miss seeing its transference to the stage, for at the Grand Opera House it is possible for one to come in actual contact with and hear Ben Hur, Messala, Iras, Simoudes, Esther, Amarach, Arrius, Sheik Ilderion and other strong and picturesque characters of the book. The Nazarene, while mentioned in the novel, is not seen upon the stage, for never yet, outside of the "Passion Play" at Oberammergau, has the Savior been successfully presented or impersonated. In "Ben Hur" the presence of the Savior is simply, but most effectively, indicated by a shaft of wonderful white light, which falls upon the heads of the lepers who are made whole and restored to those who love them. It is a most inspiring picture; a revelation, and with its accompanying music never fails to make the deepest impression on all beholders.

Frank Ireland Catches a Fish.

The Evening News published at Port Arthur, Texas, in speaking of a former townsmen, says: Mr. Frank Ireland had an ambition to join the Tarpon Club, and Sunday afternoon qualified for membership in first-class style by catching the prize fish of the season as a result of his first effort in that line. Mr. Ireland went after his game in the ship's basin, with Capt. Russell as oarsman. He waited eagerly for the "strike," and after he got it he wished he didn't have it. During the first five minutes of the contest Ireland called to Russell to "gaff him; gaff him," but Russell didn't feel like getting out and wading 100 yards in 25 feet of water to do the job. After a warm struggle of about thirty minutes, Mr. Ireland put the finishing touches to the contest and landed the fish easily, which was found to measure full six feet in length and weighed 143 pounds—the heaviest specimen caught here this season. After landing his catch Mr. Ireland said he understood why it was that fishermen never tried to catch more than one tarpon at a time, saying as he stood trembling and all unstrung, "My knees ache, my legs ache, my back aches, my arms ache and my head aches." Surely that was enough aches for one day. The tarpon is being mounted by a taxidermist.

SOUFRIERE VOLCANO.

The Sights Resulting From It Are Awe-Inspiring.

The Mountain Is Considerably Lower Than Before September 3 and the Appearance of the Summit Has Changed Wonderfully.

Kingston, Island of St. Vincent, Saturday, Sept. 6.—The sights in the Windward district of this island resulting from the eruption of Soufriere volcano September 3 are very interesting. The Rabacca river, even now, is a stream of fire a quarter of a mile or more wide. The greater part of the Rabacca estate is wrapped in vapor and there are mimic eruptions everywhere. The river bed is continuously throwing up columns and dense clouds of steam, mud and pebbles. The land has spread farther seaward and is changing considerably the appearance of the district from what it was prior to September 3. This was probably caused by the ejecta that flowed down the slopes filling these about the coast.

Fifty laborers, deceived by the apparent quietude of the volcano, were working within the fire zone Wednesday, at the extreme north of the island, when they suddenly saw evidence of an approaching disturbance of the mountain, were unable to leave the spot before electric flashes and an outpour of gases drove them to their shelter, where they remained, at the base of the mountain, through the terrible night, while forked lightning darted in all directions around them. The men miraculously escaped unhurt and arrived at Kingston yesterday.

The report of Officer of Chateau Beauvoir, who saw the Soufriere from the sea yesterday, made the following report:

"The mountain is considerably lower than before September 3, and the appearance of the summit has changed. A large proportion has evidently been blown off and the hill has a much more jagged contour. The neighborhood is altered. New ridges, valleys and a strange ravine have been cut in the west side of the volcano, down to what was formerly the Carl settlement of Haracal, where liquid matter was seen flowing during the afternoon, September 3. The northwestern estates, Petit Bornelle and Sharpes, are covered with from ten to twenty inches of gritty substance. The crops of arrowroot and cocoa are ruined."

During the night of September 4, there was a terrific storm, accompanied by blinding lightning and terrific peals of thunder and a moaning sound from the agitated crater.

A., and their aides; Lieut. Col. J. B. Kerr, military attache to the United States embassy; Commander Wm. H. Beeler, United States naval attache; Earl Roberts, commander-in-chief of the forces of Great Britain; Mr. Brodrick, British secretary for war, and the other British who are here for the maneuvers, the visiting German princes and the commanding generals in charge of the maneuvers.

The menu of the dinner was exquisite and comprised ten courses. The empress of Germany was present, sitting opposite the emperor, with Earl Roberts on her right.

After dinner the emperor mingled freely with his guests and engaged the American generals in a half hour's conversation.

A LIBERAL VICTORY.

Gen. Berti and His Army Surrender to Insurgent General.

Panama, Sept. 10.—The surrender to the Colombian insurgents of the government general, Morales Berti, and the troops of his command at Agua Dulce, which has previously been reported and which was generally believed to have taken place, has now been confirmed. This news reached Panama from conservative prisoners of the insurgents who were liberated Monday at San Carlos as a result of the landing there of an expedition from the government fleet of gunboats.

Gen. Berti, who had been besieged at Agua Dulce by the insurgents since July 28, only surrendered when his cause was hopeless. In the act of surrender the insurgent's general, Benj. Herrera, declares he recognized the abnegation of Gen. Berti and his men whom he succeeded in dominating because of the superiority of his forces and the quantity of munitions of war of all kinds at his disposal. He promises to hold inviolate the lives and honor of his prisoners and he allows Gen. Berti to retain his sword as a mark of honor in recognition of his heroic defense of Agua Dulce. The surrendered generals and officers have been paroled at Penonomé and Santiago de Veraguas. The act of surrender also sets forth that in consideration of Gen. Herrera's respect for the bravery of the men who withheld his siege, they would not be compelled personally to surrender their arms.

Kingston, Jamaica, Sept. 11.—The German steamer Valencia, from New York August 23, for Cape Haytien and other ports, which arrived here Wednesday from Santa Marta, capital of the department of Magdalena, Colombia, brings news of a victory at Santa Marta by the Colombian revolutionists over the government forces.

Capt. Gronnemeyer, of the Valencia says that last Friday the revolutionists made a desperate attack on the outskirts of Santa Marta. The government troops were overwhelmed and forced to retreat, leaving behind them 100 dead. Immediately after the withdrawal of the government forces the rebels started to destroy the railroad tracks. They derailed several trains at various points, demolishing engines and cars, the latter being chiefly fruit vans. Several lives were lost in these wrecks. Saturday the revolutionists occupied the banana district of Senega, where they continued to wreck the railroad at the same time keeping up their advance toward Santa Marta. When the Valencia sailed from Santa Marta Monday the revolutionists were so near the town that Capt. Gronnemeyer could see the flashes of their guns.

There was considerable activity on both sides of the isthmus when the vessel left Colon Monday, and that the revolutionists had already occupied Cebula, on the railroad between Panama and Colon, and were advancing in strength.

MADE A CONFESSION.

Ex-Delegate Murrell, Indicted For Bribery, Implicates Others.

Alleged Bootleg Operations of the Men in Relation to the Granting of Street Railroad Franchises—Bribery and Perjury.

St. Louis, Sept. 9.—A sensation was caused Monday by the issuance of bench warrants for the arrest of 18 members and former members of the house of delegates on the confession of Delegate J. K. Murrell, who fled to Mexico last spring after being indicted for bribery by the December grand jury in connection with the alleged bootleg operations of the municipal assembly in relation to the granting of street railroad franchises, and who unexpectedly returned to the city and surrendered. He is now in the custody of Circuit Attorney Folk, and will, it is stated, be granted immunity from punishment for turning state's evidence.

Following are the names of alleged combine members whom bench warrants are issued, charging bribery and perjury in connection with suburban street railway and other legislation:

Ed E. Murrell, John H. Schnettler, Charles F. Kelly, T. E. Albright, Geo. F. Robertson, Louis Drecker, John Helms, Chas. A. Gutke, Adolph Madera, H. A. Faulkner, Julius Lehmann, Edmund Bersch, Otto Schumacher, John A. Sheridan, Charles J. Denny, Wm. Tamblyn, J. J. Hannigan and Emile Hartman.

J. K. Murrell made the following statement for publication Monday:

"I have surrendered unconditionally to the circuit attorney and have made a full confession. I could not longer stand the agony I endured as a fugitive from justice and the wrong done by the parties just as guilty as I, who made me their cat's paw."

"I am not permitted to give the details of the evidence that I have put in the circuit attorney in possession of.

"This will all come out in the trials, and I am willing to go on the stand and tell all I know. I held the key to the box in the Lincoln Trust Co. containing $75,000 bribe money to go to the house of delegates upon the passage of the suburban bill.

"This money was put up as the purchase price for the votes of the combine, that price having been agreed upon."

St. Louis, Sept. 10.—When Judge Douglas adjourned court Tuesday night seven of the 19 members of the alleged bootleg combine of the house of delegates were still at large and the police and deputy sheriffs are using their best efforts to find them. Developments in the famous case began early and throughout the day came with startling rapidity.

The most important feature of the day's developments was the finding of new indictments against 18 members of the combine. In addition to the charges of bribery and perjury, in connection with the suburban street railroad deal the members of the alleged bootleg combine now rest under additional indictments charging bribery. These were found by the grand jury before which J. K. Murrell testified Monday to the city lighting scandal of 1900, in which each member of the combine is said to have received $2,500 in payment for his services in securing the passage of the bill. Bonds were fixed at $15,000 for each indictment, making a total of $45,000 necessary to be secured for the release of any one of the accused.

Tuesday afternoon one of the members of the alleged city council combine turned state's evidence and gave to Circuit Attorney Folk full particulars of its organization and operations. The name of this individual is being kept a secret at present.

IMPRINTED STAMPS.

Hundreds of Tons of Them Returned to Internal Revenue Bureau Office.

Washington, Sept. 11.—Commissioner Verker, of the internal revenue bureau, has been compelled to rent an outside building in which to receive and store checks and drafts bearing imprinted stamps now being sent in for redemption. The original act provided for the redemption of these imprinted stamps, limited the time within which they could be presented for redemption to two years from the time they were purchased from the government. Subsequently that time was extended to January 1, 1904. Almost immediately after the act was passed banks and large business houses began sending in their surplus stocks and in a short time the quantity had reached the point where the weight threatened the walls of the rooms and corridors where they were stored, necessitating a prompt removal. Up to this time 194 tons have been destroyed or returned to the senders after cancellation and there are now about 60 tons on hand, with the daily receipts almost equaling the cancellations.

PACKING HOUSE TEAMSTERS.

They Renew Their Fight Against the Stock Yards Concerns.

Chicago, Sept. 11.—Packing house teamsters renewed their fight against the stock yards concerns Wednesday night at a meeting of the union. It is the avowed intention to order a strike of the 600 drivers employed by Swift & Co., and a struggle which may reach the dimensions of the strike of three months ago is said to be one of the probabilities of the near future.

The trouble is the result of the alleged refusal of Swift & Co. to live up to the agreement reached last May establishing a minimum wage of 15 cents an hour.

Chicago, Sept. 11.—All the excavating teamsters in Chicago went on a strike Wednesday morning for an increase in wages to $2 per day. About 600 men, doing the teaming for the principal firms making excavations for new buildings, are involved.

THE GOVERNMENT EXHIBIT.

An Allotment of $800,000 Made By the Board of Officials.

Washington, Sept. 11.—An allotment of the $800,000 appropriated by Congress for a government exhibit at the St. Louis Purchase exposition was made Wednesday at a meeting of the board of officials appointed to prepare the exhibit to be made by the several executive departments and bureaus. An understanding also was reached as to the amount of space each of them will be entitled to at the exposition. The board decided to accept the invitation of the exposition management to visit St. Louis the latter part of September when a general conference will be held of the government commissions and the various state commissions, beginning September 29, and continuing several days.

This money was used by Shoemaker for eight years, the interest having been regularly paid by him. Shoemaker was postmaster at Albany at the time of his arrest.

CURE SICK HEADACHE.

A MYSTERY.

When we take an observation of what's going on around us often think that wonders never cease. For instance, there are people who apparently are crowned To live a life of luxury and ease. If their accounts were balanced less than nothing would remain, And prison fare they probably would chew, And yet set the fashions and we follow in their train. We don't see how they do it—but they do.

Their homes are simply palaces of elegance and art.

Their costly entertainments are a dream; They lead in gay society and are considered smart.

And pass for greater lions than they seem.

While better folks are fasting the day.

And pleasure is the object they pursue;

And yet if forced to settle what they owe they couldn't pay.

We don't see how they do it—but they do.

There are the politicians who an easy way have found.

Of living without doing any work.

Arranged in gaudy garments they are swagging around.

As lazy and as saucy as a Turk.

Although they are the enemies of everything that's right,

Although we know they rule and rob us,

They make themselves our bosses and we cheer them with delight.

We don't see how they do it—but they do.

There are the stock promoters, who are working night and day.

In laying gold on other people's shelves.

They kindly take your money and invest it in a way.

To realize a fortune—for themselves.

Their schemes are most magnificent—the profits are so great.

They only grant their favors to a few.

A million dollar company from nothing they create.

We don't see how they do it—but they do.

There are the busy merchants who are always—so they say—

A selling things at less than what they cost.

They all have bargain counters where they give the goods away.

To the end of shoppers they exhaust.

Although they're losing money on each article they sell.

According to their advertisements true,

They never look discouraged and are always very well.

We don't see how they do it—but they do.

There are the foolish people who compel themselves to bear.

A bunch growing heavier each day,

In keeping up appearances for those who never tire.

They throw their peace and comfort all away.

Their awful strain and worry is, in spite of all their guile.

Quite evident to everybody's view.

And yet with all their troubles they in public wear a smile.

We don't see how they do it—but they do.

—H. C. Dodge, in Chicago Daily Sun.

"I need hardly say there is no 'must' about it. I am an officer of the law, and I am anxious to find the man. I am sure you will tell me everything which might help me, and I don't ask to know more."

She considered it for a moment, and then took counsel of frankness. "He admitted it because I asked him."

Griffin smiled, and then explained the smile.

"Pardon me," he said. "I was thinking that no one but a woman would ever have thought of doing such a thing as that. I fancy you surprised the admission out of him."

"No, I do not think I did. He admitted the fact very willingly, though he would not admit that it was wrong."

"Ah; that helps more than you might imagine. They have all been looking for a seasoned criminal, the thing he might have suggested if she were not always beforehand with him. He was not so besotted as to believe that he had discovered in her that other half of the artist's always incomplete circle; the one person in the world who can fully understand him. On the contrary, in his sober moments he thought he knew her for what she was. But these illusions grew less frequent as visits to Mereside became more frequent, and in time they began to disappear altogether. For Mistress Margery was wise in her generation, knowing many things well and the heart of a man better than any."

But with Margery no such difficulty existed. Her sympathy was always quick and intuitive, and she seemed to have the gift of saying instinctively the thing he craved most; the thing he might have suggested if she were not always beforehand with him. He was not so besotted as to believe that he had discovered in her that other half of the artist's always incomplete circle; the one person in the world who can fully understand him. On the contrary, in his sober moments he thought he knew her for what she was. But these illusions grew less frequent as visits to Mereside became more frequent, and in time they began to disappear altogether. For Mistress Margery was wise in her generation, knowing many things well and the heart of a man better than any."

"And when he did that he doubtless assured you that he would consider himself bound in honor not to take advantage of your frankness?"

"He did just that. How did you know?" she asked.

"I merely inferred it. And his parole was to expire at St. Louis?"

"It was—it did."

Griffin rose and found his hat.

"I am greatly obliged to you, Miss Farnham. I know you haven't found it easy to speak of this to a stranger."

While the identity of the man is still a mystery, you have helped more than that you know. Good morning."

Griffin left the house, but instead of taking the street, he turned aside to stroll aimlessly along the lake shore, giving a new theory time to grow a little more definite. As has been said, his trade of man-catcher had come to be a passion with him, and he had genius where others labored only with talent. When the new theory had taken shape, it slipped into musing speech.

"She can't account for his little vagary, but I can. He simply fell in love with her at first sight, and because he was in love with her he made her do that which she knew to be right, at whatever cost to himself. That being the case, he is as sure to turn up here sooner or later as the sun is sure to rise to-morrow morning. Better than that, he may be here now. I'll camp down and study my environment for awhile. It's a pretty place, and I'll call it my vacation."

In week's time Mr. Thomas Griffin had learned more about Wahaska than the ordinary summer visitor would have learned in a year's residence. He knew Jasper Grierson and his ambitions, and Jasper Grierson's daughter and hers. He knew all about the social teapot tempest, and could identify the adherents of each of the factions. He knew that Andrew Galbraith was guest at the summer hotel on the point, and was soon able to draw his own conclusions touching the growing intimacy between Grierson and the New Orleans banker. The drawing of these conclusions cost the detective a trip to the pine-land region in the northern part of the state, and the information he sought and obtained had no bearing upon the bank robbery. Jasper Grierson held the reversal of some worthless pine land which he was trying to sell Andrew Galbraith; that was all.

"Excuse me; will you let the ladies alight?"

Griffin gave place, and saw a young man with a clean-cut, eager face hand two young women from the carriage. They were followed by an elderly gentleman with eye-glasses; and on the sidewalk the group fell into pairs. Griffin could not well help hearing the colloquy.

"I think the others will be here in a few minutes, doctor. Shall we wait and go in with them?"

Thus spoke the young man with the clean-cut face; and at the older man's negative he spoke again.

"Just as you please. If you will take Miss Raymer and let me take Miss Farnham, that will divide us equally. The seats are all near together, but I couldn't get them all in the same row."

Griffin stared hard at the speaker's companion as the party came moved away.

"So that is Miss Charlotte Farnham, and my last chance," he mused, turning back toward the hotel. "There is one grain of comfort in it for me; if her face doesn't belie her, she will tell me the truth. By Jove! but that young lawyer, or whatever he is, has an eye for good looks. I've never seen her equal in all my ups and downs, and that's saying a good deal."

So he went his way to the St. James and presently to bed, without so much as suspecting that he had actually touched elbows with the man whose identity he was vainly trying to establish.

CHAPTER XX.

It was the early morning of a flawless northern summer's day, and the lake sparkled like a sheet of hammered silver under the windows of the Farnham sitting-room. The shades had been drawn when Griffin entered, but he had taken the liberty to run them up before Miss Farnham came in. And since he was finding it necessary to read much between the lines of her guarded answers to his questions, he did not regret the precaution.

"You say he admitted his guilt to you, Miss Farnham, before the boat reached St. Louis?"

"Yes."

"May I ask how he came to do that?"

"I must I answer that?" she faltered.

CHAPTER XXI.

As Raymer had foretold Griswold's initial visit to the Grierson mansion on the lake's edge was but the beginning of an acquaintance which soon ripened into intimacy with the daughter of the house. For one thing, Griswold was always sure of his welcome at Mereside; and, for another, he was beginning to find the atmosphere of Margery's sitting-room the one environment where the remaking of the book could go on, and that Margery herself was the one person with whom he could discuss it with helpful freedom.

Do what he might he could not bring himself to the point of taking Charlotte into his confidence in the matter of the book. Though it was wholly undefined in his own mind, the barrier was the one which had been built on the voyage up the river. The more he saw of Charlotte, and the more his love for her grew and threw, the less possible it became to look forward to a day when he might hope to tell her all with a fair probability of winning her approval of the thing he had done.

But with Margery no such difficulty existed. Her sympathy was always quick and intuitive, and she seemed to have the gift of saying instinctively the thing he craved most; the thing he might have suggested if she were not always beforehand with him. He was not so besotted as to believe that he had discovered in her that other half of the artist's always incomplete circle; the one person in the world who can fully understand him. "How many times must we go back to the original question. You must choose between saying it all and having nobody read it and saying a little and having everybody read it. I'm not saying anything against your theory—it's lovely. But unless you make it a good story, first, last and all the time, you will never get a hearing."

"Then I may as well give it up," Griswold confessed. "If I may not preach a little I have no excuse for saying anything at all."

"Oh, you may preach a little. But in this particular instance you must make Rathbone stern and inflexible, cruel, if need be. You needn't be afraid of its effect upon the girl. She will condone anything he may have to do—it's a way girls have."

He looked at her narrowly and then the film of abstraction came between.

"I wonder if you really mean that? Are women so ready to condone?"

Her laugh was mocking. "You make me blush for you," she said. "Isn't an author supposed to know more about us than we know about ourselves?"

"I don't know about the supposition. But the man who knows the heart of one woman—"

She stopped him with a little gesture of impatience.

"Tell me what it is you don't know and I'll turn traitor and betray my sex."

At that his gaze went beyond her and he said: "I wonder if you know?"

"Try me and see."

He hesitated a moment, and then plunged into the depths of it.

"Then tell me this: If Rathbone should go on and do all the hard things you say his character calls for—things which Priscilla believes to be wrong—would she put her conscience aside and stand with him?"

Miss Grierson's reply was brief and very much to the point.

"A woman in love has no conscience. The man she loves has to furnish enough of that commodity for two."

Griswold winced. "What a merciless little cynic you are," he declared.

"It is true, and when you are saying true things where is the use of taking the roundabout way. I don't say the woman wouldn't be hurt. She would be, and the hurt might turn up afterward in a way to make the man sorry. But that has nothing to do with the fact that a woman's conscience can't hold its own against her love."

Griswold shook his head in depression. "I don't like to believe that. I'd like to believe that a man may go on making a good woman's conscience the touchstone by which his own conceptions of right and wrong may be corrected."

Rev. Geo. O. Barnes.

Rev. Geo. O. Barnes has been holding services each night this week at the Odd Fellows' Hall. His meetings, which have been most interesting, have not been largely attended, though the house has been comfortably filled at several of the meetings.

Brother Barnes is on the last quarter stretch of a century run, having passed his 75th year, and is as a consequence, quite feeble. He has done away with the singing features of his service, which was so much enjoyed on his previous visits. He delivers his sermons in a sitting position.

Services will be held to-night, tomorrow night and on Sunday and the public is cordially invited to attend.

Brother Barnes was at one time one of the most noted pulpit evangelist in the country and his sermons were marvels of eloquence. He is now a follower of Dowie, the Illinois evangelist, who claims to represent Elijah, of prophet days of the religion of long ago.

Dr. John D. Woods, in the Bowling Green Evening Times, says that no more wonderfully gifted man in pulpit utterance and eloquence ever graced a Kentucky pulpit than George O. Barnes, but his drifting into the realms of the insolvable mysteries of theology has carried him away from many of his old admirers who have set with thrilling interest under the wonderful sermons he was wont to deliver before he began to deal in the mystical theories he gradually drifted into. Of striking personality, with a charm of dramatic power and brilliancy of thought and eloquence of tongue, he has thrilled more audiences in Kentucky than any man in its pulpit history.

The ladies of Bourbon and surrounding counties are invited to call and inspect my Fall styles in Millinery. I have nothing but the very latest things.

A WOMAN.

You say that you are but a woman—you Who are so very wonderful to me. You tell me there is little you can do. Little indeed that all the world can see. There are no battles on the open plain. That you can fight, as I, a man, can fight; But who shall say your life is lived in vain If all my darkened days you have kept light?

Oh, little woman-heart, be glad, be glad That you are what God made you! Well I know How you have served me when the day was sad, And made me better—yea, and kept me so!

Be very glad that you, in your white place, Your little home, with folded hands can be A silent influence to whose source I trace The little good there ever was in me.

To be a woman! Is there any more Than you have need to be from day to day? How wonderful to have your heart, your store,

Of purity and goodness, and to say: "One that I love is nobler since I came; One that loves me is better for my sake." A woman! Oh, there is no greater name. That ever on the mortal tongue shall wake!

Charles Hanson Towne, in Woman's Home Companion.

The Blush of Ma-Tha-Nee

IT WAS night and the hour was late, but Mr. Beauville paid no attention most beautiful of the Antilles grows a plant which bears a huge spike of crimson flowers. Far up on the steep sides of that mountain gorge which the Spaniards named Boca d'Agua you may see these floral splendors blazing out here and there against the deep greens of the tropical foliage. The flower is a miracle of beauty, seen in its native surroundings, and the Arawak aborigines had a miraculous legend of its origin. The Arawaks of Jamaica are now an extinct race, but the legend of the Me-tha-née (which name means "The Mountain's Pride") still lives.

AND WITH THAT CRY SHE LEAPED OUT OVER THE BRINK OF THE CLIFF.

Me-tha-née was the loveliest maiden of Xamayca ("the Land of Many Streams," in the Arawak tongue). When she walked the mountain paths it was as if a young goddess had come down to sport with mortals. The delicate copper brown of her skin flushed into a rich red whenever a man looked at her; her dark lashes hid and showed her eyes like stars behind the clouds at night; her jet black hair fell about her like a soft, glossy mantle. All this was seen by a young casque named Tluto, and his heart melted for love of Me-tha-née. Quaco, the ugly priest, had also set his heart upon Me-tha-née, and he tried to persuade her father that she should become one of the handmaids of the temple to bring water from the river, sweep the smooth clay floor, weave checkered mats, and be always at the beck and call of Quaco.

Me-tha-née's father thought long about the matter, and decided to give her in marriage to the young casque whose arrows were the swiftest and surest in all the mountains of Xamayca and his canoe larger and better manned than any other upon the shores of the island.

So they made a great marriage feast of corn, agouti's flesh and fish, both from the sea and from the great river that ran through the valley below their village, which is the valley called by the Spaniards Boca d'Agua. Tluto, having sacrificed to the gods and feasted, sat in the circle of the chiefs, smoking the great stone pipe, until near sundown, Quaco being also in the circle.

And about sundown the bridegroom suddenly cried: "My head is as if I had drunk the juice of manice."

Upon this Me-tha-née began to wail, saying, "They have poisoned my bridegroom," for she mistrusted Quaco. But her father and the other chiefs quieted her, telling her that Tluto had only smoked tobacco too much from the great pipe.

Nevertheless, Tluto died before the sun had well set, and the marriage feast was turned to mourning. They laid his body upon a new mat in the house of the god, before the great stone image, and all his weeping aloud until far into the night. But long after all the others were wearied and had fallen asleep, Me-tha-née remained, cowering upon the clay floor of the temple and weeping for Tluto, until even she was wearied and fell asleep.

She had slept until it was almost the time of sunrise when she heard a voice that seemed to come from the mouth of the great stone image, saying, "Me-tha-née, go not from this house."

Now, Me-tha-née feared the temple, because of Quaco, the priest, and she only staid in it through that night because she thought that Tluto's dead body made it safe. So when she heard the voice she trembled and listened.

Again the voice said: "Me-tha-née, go not from this house. Thou shalt be the bride of the gods."

At that she screamed aloud: "Tluto save me!"

But as the dead body of Tluto did not hear her cry, she sprang up from the floor of the temple. And immediately the stone image of the god fell down and broke, and Quaco, who had hidden himself in it, rushed out upon Me-tha-née. She, finding that the spirit of her bridegroom was not near her body—or he would have answered her cry—turned and ran toward the sun, which was just rising over the edge of the cliff. (For the people of her tribe believed that spirits of great chiefs inhabited the sun.)

And as Me-tha-née ran, crying: "Tluto, save me!" Quaco ran after her, arousing all the village with a cry that the woman had broken the image of his god and was trying to escape punishment.

But she ran on until she came to the edge of the cliff, where she faced the rising sun, and, lifting up both her hands, as one who prays to the heavenly gods, cried aloud once more: "Tluto, save me!" And with that cry she leaped out over the brink of the cliff.

Presently Quaco and the people of the village reached the place from which she had leaped, and they looked down to see where Me-tha-née had been dashed to pieces. Far down they saw what seemed a great splash of blood, and when they went down, clambering fearfully, and looked more closely, behold! it was a new and altogether strange crimson flower, more splendid than any kind of flower they had ever seen.

AT THE SEASHORE.

How Two Stout Old Ladies Had a Surf Bath Without Going Into the Water.

"Individuality and personal vanity shrink in the presence of the great ocean," remarked a Detroit clergyman's wife, who had just returned from the seashore, relates the Detroit Free Press, "and the performances of average humanity at a large bathing resort are intensely interesting. People forget themselves and do all sorts of funny things. Sitting on the beach at Ocean Grove the other day watching the bathers, I saw two stout ladies in bathing suits come trotting down near the water; they were both quite elderly—nearly 80 I should say—and I wondered that they felt strong enough to go into the surf unattended.

But, bless you, the two dear old bodies—as much like two elderly infants as anything else—had no idea of battling with the waves. They sat down at the ocean's edge and rested a bit. How droll they looked in the funny little skirts, blouses and straw hats of the sea shore costume. One of them carried a large glass fruit jar, and it occurred to my idle curious mind that she was going to pack it full of sea sand to carry home in her trunk. But no. In a few minutes she got up, trotted to the sea, filled the jar with water, trotted back, and emptied it over the head of the other lady, who gasped and sputtered, but said that was delightful. The shower bath, of course, ran down over her shoulders, wetting her thoroughly.

"This process was repeated three times; then the nice old lady who had had her hand-made ocean bath arose and the other sat down to enjoy her ocean dip, conveyed to her in the same way. She, too, seemed to enjoy the salt water hugely. After it was all over, they trotted back together to the bath house, to get dressed in time for luncheon."

COLLEGE FOR WOMEN.

Develops Them Physically as Well as Mentally in These Modern Times.

With the increased study of the subject of physical culture there has come to women, as well as to men, a greater respect for a sound body and much clearer knowledge as to how far muscular strength is to be regarded as an indication of robust health. There has been a mad rush into the realm of physical development. Fifteen years ago it was the gymnasium and its apparatus which attracted the greatest attention, says Woman's Home Companion. Men exercised various muscles, and sometimes developed themselves into startling freaks. Then came a reaction in favor of outdoor sports, and it is to this reaction that much good may be attributed. The process was similar with the physical development of girls, and to-day the planning of both is for a more satisfactory effect. Fresh air, moderation, pleasure and interest are fundamental alike for men and women in the promotion of health through physical development. One cannot but be impressed with the greater proportion of fine, healthy girls and women one now meets at school and college. The day of the pale, fragile girl, subject to faints, who was once the type, has given place to the reign of the out-door beauty, whose attraction comes from health and the high spirits incident to its enjoyment. The evolution of such women can easily be measured from the methods of sport now in vogue in many of our large colleges for women.

WHAT THE FISH SAID.

Charlie Was Right on the Spot When Conundrums Were to Be Answered.

Five-year-old Charlie developed a great fondness for conundrums and puzzles, anything that required serious thought and discovery, and he displayed a startling astuteness in thinking out original answers to well-known queries. He was continually astonishing his mother and his family with the oddity and quaintness of his remarks, relates an exchange.

Especially was he fond of having stories told him, and every night at bedtime the penance of going to bed was compensated for by an original story, a feat that sorely taxed the imagination of his mother. One night the story was about a fishing expedition with imaginary accessories to make it interesting. In the midst of the story the telephone bell rang, making a little interruption. The story was resumed at the point where the alluring bait was cast into the water, and two little fishes swam up to look at it and concluded that it was worth trying. One of them snapped at it, and found that it was different from what he expected it to be.

"And what do you suppose he said to the other fish, who was looking at him?"

"I know," cried Charlie. "He said: 'Line is busy, call again!'"

ILLINOIS THE BICYCLE STATE.

Manufactures More of the Two-Wheeled Silent Steeds Than Any Other State of the Union.

Illinois is the leading state of the union so far as relates to the manufacture of bicycles, according to a bulletin issued by the census office. Illinois manufactured 28.1 per cent. of the total product for 1900, the number of establishments being 60 and the amount of capital invested $7,694,658. Ohio is the nearest competitor to Illinois, the percentage of the product manufactured in that state being 12.8. The number of establishments in the Buckeye state is 34 and the capital invested is $4,554,576. New York is third on the list, having manufactured 12 per cent. of the product. The number of establishments in the Empire state is 66 and the capital invested $3,226,943. Connecticut, which holds the fourth place, manufactures 11.5 per cent. of the products in its 24 establishments. The Nutmeg state has $4,215,399 invested in this industry. In the United States there are 312 bicycle establishments with a capital of $24,783,659, and the product is valued at $31,915,908.

STUDYING SUGAR PLANTS.

Dr. Wiley of Agricultural Department, Making Some Interesting Experiments.

Dr. Wiley, chemist of the agricultural department, is making some interesting experiments in sugar producing plants on the farm in the Potomac bottoms, and which are operated by the department. Sugar cane, sorghum, sugar beets, Rocky Ford muskmelons and sugar corn—all sugar producing plants—have been planted side by side, and Dr. Wiley finds they each flourish with equal vigor in this climate. This is in itself a matter of much surprise to scientists, as some of the plants were thought to flourish best in hot climates or near the Atlantic slope, while other sugar producing plants were thought to grow only in cold countries. Dr. Wiley's experiment is not so much to find their adaptability to a temperate climate as to determine the sugar producing qualities of these products and their relative value. For this purpose the plants give every evidence of perfect development in the District of Columbia.

BLOW TO SUBMARINE BOATS.

Adverse Opinion from Naval Officers May Cut Off Appropriation for Further Experiment.

Three important naval officers took such strong grounds against submarine torpedo boats in their present stage of development before the senate naval committee that it is possible no appropriation will be made at this session for the purchase of craft of this type. Rear Admiral Bowles thought it inadvisable to experiment further with the Holland boat, while Admiral Bradford quoted Admiral von Tirpitz, head of the German navy, as saying: "I am sure that they are of no value that I refuse to waste any time in experimenting with them." Capt. Sigsbee expressed the opinion that it would be well to go slow for the present and not purchase 30 or 40 submarine boats.

St. Louis Relieved.

The St. Louis exposition management must enter into contract not to open the fair on Sundays before the government will hand over any more funds. Provision in the appropriation bill makes this imperative. St. Louis should be thankful, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, that the government has decided the matter for her.

BLUNDERING COURTESY.

The Obliging Young Man Had Hair on His Head and Could Spare His Hat.

Excessive kindness of heart, when allied to a blundering courtesy, is occasionally productive of an amusing incident. Of such is the following: A president in recent times of one of our royal colleges was noted for the possession of a trim little yacht, which he was fond of sailing in one of the reaches of the River Thames, says the Candid Friend. One day the president had the misfortune to capsize his craft, with the consequent result of complete immersion. He was immediately assisted ashore and a change of clothing provided at an adjacent boathouse. This, however, did not include a hat of any description. The president, who is an old man and correspondingly bald, stood shivering, his scant hair uncomfortably raised by the cold water. He was observed with respectful compassion by some of the students of the college who had witnessed the catastrophe, and offered his own headgear. The president, however, seemed reluctant to accept it, saying: "If I take yours, what will you do?" "Oh, sir," said the student, "it doesn't matter for me, I've got hair on my head." This statement was accepted as final by the president, together with the cap, and he laughed heartily at what, after all, was not wholly a one-sided joke, for the consternation of the student may be better imagined than described.

THEIR GENERAL ORDERS.

A Raw Recruit Who Had His Instructions Committed Letter Perfect.

A Washington boy, son of a well-known official of the District government, is home for a brief visit from his station at Columbus Barracks, Ohio, being a second lieutenant in the United States army. A large number of recruits are being "licked into shape" at Columbus Barracks, and the young officer has a store of amusing anecdotes relating to the "rookies," says the Washington Star.

One of the recruits was walking past as a sentinel when he was approached by the officer of the day, and asked to repeat his instructions. The reply was:

"Walk this post, keeping always on the alert, and don't let any disreputable people in, except officers' wives and families."

Another sentinel, in reciting his instructions, said:

"I must not let any children go outside the post alone, unless accompanied by their mothers or nurses."

Couldn't Be Square.

"Of course" said the promoter of the get-rich-quick company, "we can only give the prospective earnings in round numbers."

"Ah, yes," replied the victim, "because they couldn't possibly be square."—Philadelphia Press.

Father of the Pastor (after the sermon)—"How Horace has changed since he was a baby!" The Mother—"What an idea! Of course he has changed." Father—"What I mean is that when he was a baby he used to keep me awake."—Boston Transcript.

WHAT

A REMARKABLE BOB CAT.

Draws the Water and Catches the Poultry for His Owner's Camp Up in Maine.

Asa Wing is the owner of a tame bob cat which is endowed with more intelligence than is given to most cats. This cat, says the New York Sun, is two years old and has been allowed to run at large ever since Wing pulled him from the side of his dead mother, whom he shot on the shores of Middle Chain lake in June, 1900.

At that time the kitten was no more than a shapeless mass of soft fur and sharp claws. Wing fed him on cow's milk and inside of a month he was able to kill Wing's entire flock of hens, thereby cutting off his owner's supply of fresh eggs. But the men who employed Wing to do their paddling and cooking never suffered for fresh poultry, because as soon as the hens were gone the bob cat went into the woods and caught more partridges than could be eaten in camp, keeping up the supply all through the year. Though it is illegal to shoot partridges between January and September, the law does not apply to cats, and when a man has dead partridges placed upon his doorstep every morning, Wing thinks it is his duty to see that the food is not wasted.

And as the bob cat waxed strong with age he increased in wisdom, doing many things that surprised his owner and several that made him very angry. The climax came during the drought of last fall, when the water in the lake became warm and full of sediment, compelling Wing to dig a well for himself and his guests.

As it would take two days to go to the village and get a pump, Wing saved time and expense by putting a well sweep above the hole in the ground and drawing the water with a log bucket attached to the sweep. No sooner had he put the swinging pole in place than the bob cat perched on its top and had great sport in scampering from the end above the well to the end on the ground the cat's weight causing the pole to rise and fall like a see-saw. Wing tried to drive his pet away, but could not do so, because as soon as he went to the well the cat would run to the farther end of the pole, placing itself beyond reach and raising the filled bucket to the surface ready to be poured out.

Wing is not an educated man, but he knows a good thing when he sees it.

No sooner had he seen that the cat could draw water for fun than he made up his mind that the animal should draw water as a business. Rigging a bail to the edge of the watering trough and placing a hook on the side of the well bucket, he went out to put his idea into practice. The cat was hanging from the end of the pole over the well and the filled bucket was deep down in the water. Wing clapped his hands and made a rush for the cat.

The cat at once took the sound as a signal for sport. He ran to the outer end of the pole, bringing up the filled bucket, which caught upon the bail on the trough and was emptied. After this Wing stepped back a rod, and the cat anxious to continue the play, ran forward and submerged the pail. In ten minutes time the sportive cat had filled the wooden trough with pure water, and Wing had not taken his hands from his pockets.

Since that time Wing has drawn water and will not permit his guests to do so. Some of them offered him $25 for the accomplished cat before they came away but Wing laughed at them. He says that an animal which can keep the house supplied with fresh poultry the year around and draw all the water for his stock and boarders is as good as a hired man.

It has been remarked that although women succeed in most things they undertake, they are no good, at least in England, at commerce. This observation does not hold good in France, where many of the large wine-growers, sugar factories and other important concerns are in the hands of women. In the shop, too, they take an active part, are up early and late, displaying great intelligence and capability in all branches as well as bookkeeping. In this country women seem to take a second place. There are no female Liptons, Harrods or Basses, while even linendrapers, shops are generally managed and controlled by men. Our business capacity is certainly not sufficiently developed.

It is further asserted that no well-kept hotel or club is managed by a woman, which seems on the face of it a paradox, for surely woman is the born housekeeper, and hotel-keeping is only a home on a large scale.

I fear the accusation is true. WOMEN ARE TOO FOND OF PETTY ECONOMIES, THEY CANNOT GRASP THINGS AS A WHOLE. They scrape and cheese-pare, lose good servants for the sake of a pound or two's wages, and buy cheap provisions with the idea of economy.

TRUE ECONOMY IS TO BUY THE BEST OF EVERYTHING AND GET THE BEST VALUE FOR YOUR MONEY.

In English hotels the most curiously antiquated prejudices still survive. For instance, in the heat of summer, when provisions are as cheap as possible, fresh fruit and vegetables rarely appear on the coffee-room table. I have seen, on a sweltering day in July, when strawberries were being positively given away, dried prunes served up as the stewed fruit for dinner. Such foolish economies and short-sightedness send people abroad, where dessert is always offered, and salads and nice vegetables are a sine qua non. Women might study these matters with advantage, and thus learn to be good managers of hotels. As it is, the men step in everywhere and USURP ALL THE PURELY FEMININE EMPLOYMENTS, as diessmakers, hairdressers, cooks and managers of ladies' clubs.

HYPNOTISM THAT FAILED.

The Scheming Operator Got Too Near His Subject and Something Happened.

"I have come," said the clever young hypnotist, making two or three mysterious passes with his hands and looking straight into the man's eyes, relates the Chicago Record-Herald, "to ask you for your daughter. We love each other very dearly—look out, there is a horsefly buzzing near your left ear!—and we want your blessing. I am fully prepared to take care of a family—you don't remember your name, do you?—and the sweet one who is so near and dear to you will be perfectly safe in my keeping. Of course you would not think of raising an objection that might make her unhappy all the rest of her life, would you? Yes, it is very kind of you to give—oh, poor old donkey, have you eaten the nice fresh grass there? Come, I will lead you to another spot where it is longer and greener, and we will—"

"All right, all right," said the office boy, snapping his thumb and finger close to the clever young hypnotist's ear. "Wake up! It's all over."

"Where am I?" the clever young hypnotist asked.

"Out in the alley. I guess the donkey didn't like that last grass. He kicked."

DRIVEN TO DESPERATION.

Seaside Maiden Gives Up Everything, Including Her Love for Her Lover.

The maiden was suffering with seasickness. In fact, she was "at the time when the incidents of this story open," a veritable mal de mermaid. Her lover, whose heart ached at her most unromantic gasps over the rail and her agitated and strenuous effort to 'amp the hole in the bottom of the sea, approached her tenderly, relates the Los Angeles Herald.

"It is too bad," he said, idiotically.

"Is—is it?" she asked, satirically, as she again made Peleoid demonstrations.

"Too bad you had to give up," he continued, with the same beautiful intelligence that characterizes all persons who try to rescue a first aid to the neck."

"Yes," she said, with exasperated savagery, "she wiped the tears from her redning lids." "I have given up everything but my love for you; and now—" she made a wild reach for the rail once more, and, after a few moments, she completed her sentence—"there, that's gone, too."

But they made up again when she was better.

Women and Jewels.

Jewels, candy, flowers, man—that is the order of a woman's preferences. Jewels form a magnet of mighty power to the average woman. Even that greatest of all jewels, health, is often ruined in the strenuous efforts to make or save the money to purchase them. If a woman will risk her health to get a coveted gem, then let her fortify herself against the insidious consequences of coughs, colds and bronchial affections by the regular use of Dr. Boschee's German Syrup. It will promptly arrest consumption in its early stages and heal the affected lungs and bronchial tubes and drive the "r" disease from the system. It is a cure all but it is a certain cure for coughs, colds and all bronchial troubles. You can get Dr. G. G. Green's reliable remedies at W. T. Brooks'. Get Green's Special Almanac.

Brain Food Nonsense.

Another ridiculous food fad has been branded by the most competent authorities. They have dispelled the silly notion that one kind of food is needed for brain, another for muscles, and still another for bones. A correct diet will not only nourish a particular part of the body, but it will sustain every other part. Yet however good your food may be, its nutriment is destroyed by indigestion or dyspepsia. You must prepare for their appearance or prevent their coming by taking regular doses of Green's August Flower, the favorite medicine of the healthy millions. A few doses aids digestion, stimulates the liver to healthy action, purifies the blood, and makes you feel bonyant and vigorous. You can get Dr. G. G. Green's reliable remedies at W. T. Brooks'. MALARIA An Invisible Enemy to Health Means bad air, and whether it comes from the low lands and marshes of the country, or the filthy sewers and drain pipes of the cities and towns, its effect upon the human system is the same.

These atmospheric poisons are breathed into the lungs and taken up by the blood, and the foundation of some long, debilitating illness is laid. Chills and fever, chronic dyspepsia, torpid and enlarged liver, kidney troubles, jaundice and biliousness are frequently due to that invisible foe, Malaria. Noxious gases and unhealthy matter collect in the system because the liver and kidneys fail to act, and are poured into the blood current until it becomes so polluted and sluggish that the poisons literally break through the skin, and carbuncles, boils, abscesses, ulcers and various eruptions of an indolent character appear, depleting the system, and threatening life itself.

The germs and poisons that so oppress and weaken the body and destroy the life-giving properties of the blood, rendering it thin and watery, must be overcome and carried out of the system before the patient can hope to get rid of Malaria and its effects.

S. S. S. does this and quickly produces an entire change in the blood, reaching every organ and stimulating them to vigorous, healthy action. S. S. S. possesses not only purifying but tonic properties, and the general health improves, and the appetite increases almost from the first dose. There is no Mercury, Potash, Arsenic or other mineral in S. S. S. It is strictly and entirely a vegetable remedy.

Write us about your case, and our physicians will gladly help you by their advice to regain your health. Book on blood and skin diseases sent free.

Victory for Pythians.

The endowment rank of the Knights of Pythias, which was in serious trouble fourteen months ago, has cleared up all its back death claims within less than a year after the increase in rates which was put into effect last September. June 1, 1901, there was $559,500 of unpaid death claims and only $3,633 in cash on hand. This was reduced steadily until at the first of this month all the death claims due were settled up, there being only $159,000 outstanding, in which the proofs had not been complete or the claims were under investigation by the legal department.

This has surpassed the greatest expectations of the advocates of the reorganization and increase in rates. The defections because of the advance were much less than had been feared, and new members are coming in rapidly, there being a net gain of over a thousand in the last quarter. These members are paying an average of 42 per cent. more in premiums, so that the income is much increased, while the liabilities are decreased by the retirement of a number of aged members who withdrew because of the much increased cost of their insurance. In addition to paying up all the back death claims, the debt on the furniture account for the Lexington Hotel, which was $48,000 at the first of last year, has been wiped out entirely, and there was over $48,000 on hand after paying all the death claims due.
